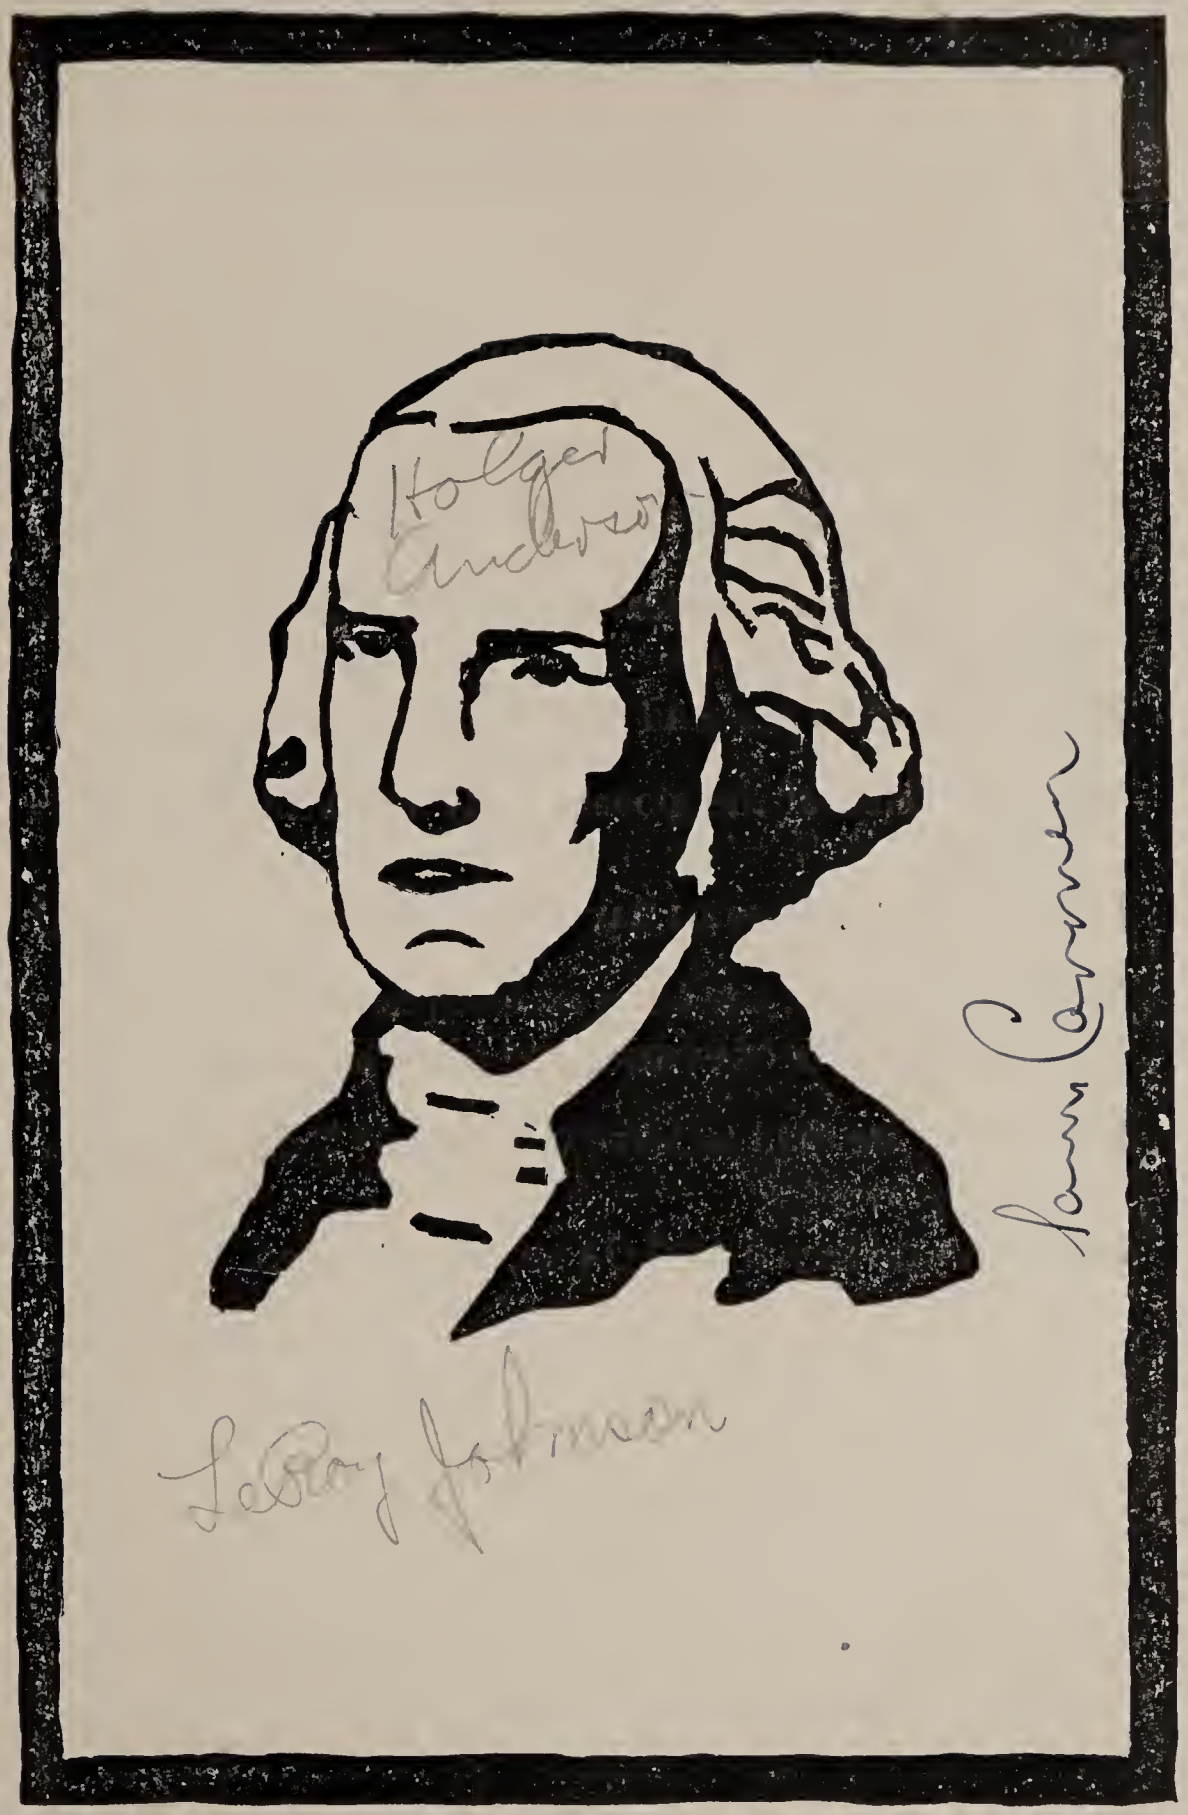
YEAR BOOK
JUNE 1932

Jamestown, New York



Deep Down in Our Hearts

We think we are glad to graduate from W.J.H.S.
But how many of us really mean it? Just try and guess.

When we think of the dear old library with permits signed H.E.S.
How many of us are glad to go? Just try and guess.

When we think of the gloomy study hall with initial carved desks;
Do we realize that some day we'll be back just as guests?

When we think of the office so frenquently dreaded;
Will our thoughts of excuses and pleas be inbedded?

How many are glad to leave this school? This group step up and glow;
Glow with pride you say? Oh no, not really so.

Kathryn Kettle 9-2

We the students and faculty of Washington Junior High School lovingly dedicate this annual to Jennie R. Kellogg who has willingly served the public schools for fifty years.

Editorial

As the close of school comes around thoughts begin to wander back to the happenings of the past year. The Freshman Class remember with regret that this has been their last appearance as students in this school; the Eighth graders look forward to another year, and the Seventh graders have a long stay ahead. We hope that you find this book a memorable reminder of your experiences during the school year 1931-32.

With the support and cooperation of many of the students of this school the Board of Editors has published a year book of which they are justly proud.

We wish to thank the Faculty Advisers and other teachers also who have willingly helped to make this annual possible.

How He Knew

Father's watch says half-past six;
  Mother's does not go.
The parlor clock is always fast,
  The kitchen clock too slow.

My watch is being mended,
  Jimmy's has no spring.
Sister's on her bracelet,
  Is just a gimrack thing.

I didn't hear the whistles blow,
  And don't know what is right.
But think it must be dinner-time
  Just by my appetite.

American Legion School Award

The American Legion Medal is to be awarded annually in the public and private grammar schools in the state, to the boy of the graduating class who best represents those qualities of character and ability, which we believe, when properly cultivated and matured, will result in worthy citizenship and well rounded manhood.

The award is made to the boy ranking highest in the judgment of his teachers and classmates, in COURAGE, HONOR, SCHOLARSHIP, LEADERSHIP, and SERVICE.

The American Legion Auxiliary awards a similar Medal for girls. This award is based upon the same merits, together with an essay. The title of the essay for 1932 is, "Washington's home life at Mt. Vernon."

Dramatics

The Shakespearian Dramatic Club is composed of students of the ninth grade.

Only two presentations have been given before the public. The first was "Sylvia's Aunt," acted by a cast entirely of girls. The second "Captain Washington," was acted by boys. The profits from the latter were donated to the Gertrude Wilcox Memorial Fund.

We owe a debt of thanks to Miss Perkins. our advisor and for her help in our efforts toward a better standard of Dramatics in the Junior High School.

Washington Junior High School Lyceum

Lyceum has completed a successful year. Eight new members were taken into the club and the lyceum is filled to its greatest capacity. Walter Craig was sent to compete in the oratorical contest. Copies of our constitution were printed by some boys under the supervision of Mr. Filmer. To Mr. Parker we owe many thanks for advising and helping us to win success. The Lyceum's annual picnic is looked forward to by all. We hope that the members of the Lyceum who are not going to leave school will go on making improvements and raising the standard of debate.

Basket Ball

The Basket Ball Championship was won by Washington only after hard series of games had been played. The result of the last scheduled game found Washington in a tie with Jefferson making necessary a playoff contest which was won in the last few minutes of play by the Red and White.

Track

With one of the strongest teams in its history, the North Side School staged a complete rout at the expense of Lincoln and Jefferson. The track events were held in a drizzling rain but produced some remarkabley fast time despite the weather.

Among the better achievements of the day were the 100yd. dash which Wells ran in 10.8 seconds and the 220 run by Lamonica in 25.6

The highlight of the afternoon however came in the high jump with Berquist going over the bar at 5ft. 8½ in. Berquist out jumped Patterson of Lincoln at 5ft. 5in. and went on to set a new school record, breaking the old one held jointly by himself and Price now of the High School by 4½ inches.

Following are the events, the Washington boys who placed and the winning records.

Spring

Robin, sparrow, jay and wren,
  Sing that spring is here again.
All the world is happy, now,
  As spring comes in with a graceful bow.

The trees are budding out anew,
  Due to April showers,
The sky has on a dress of blue,
  And fields are filled with flowers.

Daffodils of shining gold,
  Tell the world a story old,
That spring, at last is here,
  The happiest time of all the year.

George Washington

George Washington was born on February twenty-second, seventeen thirty-two, in Westmoreland County, Virginia. His father died early but his mother, Mary Ball, gave him an admirable training which was later continued by his elder half brother, Augustine. Of actual schooling he had little, save what sufficed to make him a practical surveyor. He spelled badly, but was able to do his accounts well. Washington may have been rather poor in some subjects but he tamed the wildest horses and dominated the most unruly of his schoolmates. In short he was a young Virginian Cyrus, riding well, shooting well and telling the truth.

One can contemplate with pleasure the picture he presents as a sixteen year old explorer, surveying the lands of Lord Fairfax amid the wild passes of the Alleghenies. The youth who so bravely fronted all "moving accidents by flood and field" who gained a reputation for sobriety and prudence, who was forced to encounter the official circles of Williamsburg was doing precisely the work best fitted to prepare him for the higher labors of his manhood.

He rose rapidly, in the fall of seventeen-fifty three, he was sent by Governor Dinwiddie of Virginia on a mission to the French invaders of the Ohio valley, a dangerous task but one which he accepted with alacrity. Neither savages nor treacherous guides could prevail against a heart so bold nor an eye so keen; nor could flattering at home undermine a nature so well balanced, a modesty so inate and pure.

Washington married Martha Curtiss, a widow, in January seventeen-fifty-nine, and those who are wont to accuse Washington for lack of sentiment had better read all they can find on the romantic affair.

He was president of the Constitutional Convention and it was under the Constitution there made that he was chosen for the president of America. He was inaugerated in New York on April thirty, seventeen eighty-nine. He held that office two terms until seventeen-seventy-nine and then retired to his home at Mount Vernon where he later died.

Jamie's Dentist

Jamie had a loose tooth; but wouldn't have it for long, as it was loose. It was just a baby-tooth and every little while Jamie would wiggle it. Although it annoyed him very much he wouldn't permit mother or father to pull it out. They suggested that he go to a dentist, but he loudly objected to that. Jamie continued to fuss and mother kept on coaxing.

One day, Walter, Jamie's friend, came over to play. For a long time Jamie forgot all about his tooth and then he remembered it and began to complain.

"Why don't you pull it out?" asked Walter.

"How can I?" grumbled Jamie.

"Huh! that's easy! All you have to do is to tie a thread to it and open the door; tie the other end of the thread to the door-knob and shut the door."

"I don't see how that can pull out a tooth" argued Jamie.

"Well, it can! That's how I pulled out mine!"

"Did it hurt?"

" Not a bit! Let me show you!"

"No, I'm afraid."

"Really, Jamie, that is a splendid way", encouraged his mother. "I did it once when I was a little girl, but I didn't think to tell you about it. I'll get a thread and we will have the tooth in a minute."

"I don't want to," whined Jamie.

"I wouldn't be a coward," bragged Walter.

"Huh! you are no braver'n I am," replied Jamie.

"I would show him that I was courageous, too, if I were you," said mother.

"I am," asserted Jamie, holding his chest a little higher.

"Shall I tie the string on?"

"Ye-e-es, I guess so."

So his mother tied the string to the tooth, opened the door, and started to tie the other end of the string to the door-knob, but Jamie objected and walked away, letting the loose end of the string fall to the floor.

"No, wait a minute."

"Why wait?"

"I am not ready to have it pulled out."

"Really, Jamie, you are exasperating! You must have it out"—

"Oh, Mamma! the kitty has run off with my thread!" interrupted Jamie in surprise.

"What?" His mother turned around to see, and sure enough, there was the mischievous little kitten at the other end of the room with the thread. "Why, how did it ever come off your tooth? I tied it very tight."

"I don't know," replied the puzzled boy.

"Oh, Jamie here is your tooth!" exclaimed Walter, who had run after the cat.

"Where?" asked Jamie's mother.

"Right here, on the end of this thread. See!" and Walter showed them the tooth.

"Is that mine?" asked Jamie, greatly perplexed.

"It certainly is," admitted his mother. "Let me look in your mouth. Yes, the tooth is gone."

"The kitty pulled it out!" laughed Walter.

"That's funny " grinned Jamie, "Why didn't I feel it

"Didn't I tell you it wouldn't hurt?" chimed in Walter.

"Come here, kitty, " Jamie said, taking it up in his arms;" you certainly are a fine little dentist!"

Night

The beaming sun goes down at night
Behind the hills to rest,
And night comes stealing across the sky
While light is still in the west.

The forest is lying in shadows deep;
Most animals are all asleep.
The wild ones are all up and out,
But the forest is quiet all about.

Dawn comes creeping over the hill;
The hoot of an owl comes loud and shrill.
He flaps his wings and flies to his nest
And there he spends his day in rest.

The shadows lengthen, the twilight deepens,
The stars come out and shine;
The moon comes up, the wind dies down,
The trees they sigh and pine.

The beaming sun comes over the hill
Its radiant glory showing still.
It now begins its work anew,
With all the forest drenched in dew.

Nelly Custis

It was Christmas Eve, at Mt. Vernon, the mansion was ablaze with lights set like glowing jewels against the dark background of forests and lawns.

The war was over and George Washington was on his way home. All the people, black and white, rich and poor from the smallest homes to the statliest ones along the Potomac, had gathered to celebrate his coming. The long lane and broad driveway leading to the house literally swarmed with humanity, and crowds were at the gate ready to make a noisy demonstration when he arrived.

Bonfires flamed, banjoes twanged and the melodies of gay fiddlers sounded from far and near, while in the doorway of the mansion, from which poured a flood of light, relatives and neighbors stood ready to welcome the hero after his long years of struggle to free the colonists.

Among the waiting group was a child of two, holding her mother's hand and eagerly questioning "Will he come?" "Did he say he was coming?" "Why doesn't he come?"

Nelly Custis was the grand-daughter of Martha Custis Washington. Her father had died shortly after she was born so she knew no other father than Washington, who had adopted her after her father's death. She had two sisters, Elizabeth born in 1776, then Martha born in 1777 and one brother George Washington Parke then only six months old.

As the children had been brought out for his admiration, Washington showed great interest in them especially Nelly. When he arrived, it was she who put her tiny hand in his big one and looked into his face with such an adorably confiding smile that it completely congured Wa hington.

From that day until his dying moments Nelly was dearer to Washington than anyone next to his dearly loved wife Martha Custis Washington.
